Re: Power Integrations, Inc. v. Fairchild Semiconductor Int'l, Inc.,
D. Del., C.A. No. 04-1371 (JJF)

Dear Lionel:

I write regarding the subpoena that plaintiff served on LG Electronics, USA, Inc. ("LG") in the above matter. When we spoke last week, you indicated that you believed that LG's United States entities do not have the information plaintiff seeks, but that the information is in the possession of LG's parent in Korea. While we do not accept the premise that responsive information in the possession of a corporate parent is outside the possession, custody or control of the subsidiary,¹ we hope that we can help LG more easily identify the information we seek.

Without limiting the scope of the subpoena, documents responsive to Requests 1 and 2 could be determined from LG's (a) approved parts list, or (b) authorized and approved suppliers and sub-contractors for integrated circuits for power conversion. LG is also likely to acquire Fairchild PWM controllers directly from Fairchild, or through subcontractors such as Powernet, for LG's LCD monitors and DVD players. Documents responsive to Request No. 3 should be readily ascertainable from LG's US sales information once LG has been able to identify the products that use or incorporate Fairchild PWM controllers. In any event, whether the information requested is located in the United States or Korea, LG has an obligation to search for and produce documents responsive to plaintiff's narrowly-tailored subpoena.

¹ See Afros S.P.A. v. Krauss-Maffei Corp., 113 F.R.D. 127, 132 (D. Del. 1986) (granting motion to compel discovery from foreign parent corporation).

We look forward to receiving your response to the foregoing and are hopeful that with further dialogue LG will be able to locate and produce the information plaintiff seeks with minimal disruption.

Sincerely,
